Subject: Microsoft Settlement

1/24/2002

Microsoft's proposed settlement in no way repairs the damage done by their anti-competitive practices. Furthermore, the influx of Microsoft software into the education market would extend their monopoly, perpetuating Microsoft's ability to use illegal business practices and stagnate the industry.

To truly create a fairly competitive market, Microsoft's control must be restricted, most effectively by splitting the company into two (or preferably three) smaller, specialized, independent companies.
